who corresponded with Miss Eames many years ago. In the house was $28.12 in cash, and a Dime Savings Bank book was found which showed a balance to her credit of $2,884.77.

Miss Eames was the survivor of three sisters who lived in this house. One of their peculiarities was that they never allowed visits from their neighbors. The small boys of the neighborhood who used to play noisily in her rearward, and occasionally threw things at the house, were her chief annoyances. One day she caught one of her small tormentors and locked him in an upper room. She refused to allow the policeman who came after the boy to enter until he had threatened to break in the door.

When released the boy was found to be frightened, but unharmed. The boy's parents sued for damages, and the case was settled out of court. There are indications that the old woman died from starvation, and an autopsy will be held.

TO DROP THE DOUBLE LEADERSHIP IDEAL.

When the new General Committee of the Democratic machine is organized, the double-leadership idea in the Assembly districts will be abandoned. It is said that it leads to friction, and if there is
